Let it be said that WWWG holds NO legal Liability for anything that comes out of Emil's mouth, by pen or even, Telex.

The lesson for this disclaimer lies in well tested Singaporean Civil Law by WWWG over it's past 15-years of cooperation with one, Emil (the Starving Artist) featuring a non-stop cascade sequence of law suits and even, bomb threats by Emil.

There can never be badness in the words from the likes of the Holy Elephant of Joy even when it is a stinging rejection of everything that the merry trickers of the Great Ahriman Social Reset hold close to the inner most core of their essence and this is where Emil makes the difference with his classic mad dog style of realism.

My first pilgrimage to his (proper pronoun directly from the Big Guy himself) shrine was fraught with danger and a slight taste of adventure mixed all together in a harrowing Tuk-Tuk drive over to the river from the dusty, crossroads junction station that looked for all manners of fairness to be a stage set from the Petticoat Junction TV Show – I mean this in a flattering comparison to a nice place to be.

Figure that one out (all of you from the League of Emil Haters) and make sure that you commit more time, effort to discovering all of the hidden Jesuits of Truth propaganda interwoven in the text's secret micro-nano dot printing.

Now that I got them out of the way as they will believe this nonsense and will leave us alone for at least a couple of week (hopefully more...dare I wish?).

Anyway, I found these old photos taken with my trusty Nikon F4s at the bottom of my steamer trunk.

Last year, WWWG published an update that goes into some detail how easy this trip can be and how it can easily be considered as a "Day Trip."

Seeing that WWWG is still hawking this edition, Seine (prompted no doubt by his cadre of fowl, Socialist Accountants that he hired after they were fired by the CCP as being too cruel) make a rather strong case for not include any of that here.
